

STRESS AND PAIN

A "stressor" is any event or circumstances that triggers a physical stress response. Pain itself is a potential stressor, and a perception of pain as threatening or frightening may evoke an increased physical stress response, thereby accelerating pain perception. In addition, to pain, other life stressors can increase the physical stress response—such as increased heart rate, blood pressure or